

DO YOU KNOW WHO THE NEXT BEEF STOCKMAN OF THE FUTURE IS?

THE successful Beef Stockman of the Future competition is back and welcoming entries for 2012.

Farmers Guardian and the National Beef Association have launched the hunt for the best young beef farmers and stockmen (or women) working within the agricultural industry.

Now in its third year, the competition will once again champion talented individuals who strive to make a difference in beef farming. Wherever their business is, and regardless of size or location, we are looking for young beef farmers and stockmen who combine strong technical management with the determination to succeed in today's challenging environment.

Emma Penny, editor of Farmers Guardian, says: "We're looking for someone with enthusiasm, ideas and drive. It's a fantastic opportunity to gain recognition in a sector which needs to highlight and champion the next generation."

Nick Davis was named Beef Stockman of the Future in 2010 and was part of the judging panel last year. Through his involvement in the competition, he has gone on to become chairman of the NBA's Welsh region.

He says: "Entering the NBA and Farmers Guardian Beef Stockman competition really made me think about what I had achieved with my suckler cows. It was a great feeling to win and a real boost."

As well as the Frank Momber memorial trophy, the winner will receive £600 and the second and third place winners will receive £400 and £200 respectively.

If you know someone who deserves to win, please encourage them to complete the enclosed application form and return it to: Danusia Osiowy, Beef Stockman of the Future, Farmers Guardian, Unit 4, Fulwood Business Park, Caxton Road, Fulwood, Preston, Lancashire, PR2 9NZ by March 9, 2012.
